

Please avoid contact with the water

When sewers get too full, they can back up and flood local homes. To prevent this, we are screening some of the surplus wastewater and releasing it into the watercourse.

Please keep children and pets away from the watercourse. If you've had contact with the water, please wash your hands before eating or drinking. The Environment Agency and local Environmental Health are aware.

Fifty years ago the waters of our valleys covered a surface almost treble that which they do to-day. Our river courses then were recipients of hundreds of tiny waterways, and of the multitude of creatures which each and all of the waterways produced. ... Those grass-fringed runnels, ditches and carriers remain vivid in my memory today, for everywhere was a scene of activity.... everywhere were masses of crawling caddis and snails, every stone or loose turf sheltered a horde of shrimps and small fly larvae, while thousands of minnows scattered in panic as great trout and eels sped along the carriers to safety in the deep pools at the hatchways, or scrambled with their backs out of the water, to the drains and thence to the main river. Every pool was full of life.
